Reactions to the agreement on constitutional reform: the agreement guarantees multi-ethnic entities

Caliber 7.62 pistols temporarily excluded from the list of illegal weapons

According to Oslobodjenje, SFOR Spokesman Scott Lundy told a press conference on the Harvest operation in Sarajevo on Thursday that "the Stabilization Force recently developed a new list of military weapons as part of its ongoing effort to maintain a safe and secure environment throughout BiH." "This list was presented to the Federation and Republika Srpska Ministries of the Interior some weeks ago. In issuing its new list of military weapons, SFOR is trying to better define what constitutes a military weapon. It is hoped that the list will give everyone in Bosnia and Herzegovina a clearer understanding of the sorts of weapons that should be turned in during Operation HARVEST. While there is agreement by the Entities on everything else on the list, SFOR understands that provisions concerning pistols of the calibre 7.62 mm and above has caused some concern and conflict with existing policies. Therefore, the Commander of SFOR has directed that Serial 4 to the Definition of Military Weapons, which states "Revolvers and self-loading pistols with a calibre 7.62 mm and above" is suspended while our discussions with the Interior Ministries continue. This means that SFOR will not consider revolvers and self-loading pistols in the strict definition of military weapons and will not include them as part of Operation HARVEST," Lundy said.

Reuters: Dutch slammed for not stopping Srebrenica slaughter

The Dutch could probably have prevented the 1995 Srebrenica massacre but failed miserably on every level, according to a damning new report into Europe's worst atrocity since World War Two. The report, released by Dutch peace group IKV on Thursday, said Dutch U.N. troops and politicians bore responsibility for failing to protect up to 8,000 Bosniak men and boys murdered after Serb forces overran the U.N. "safe area" in eastern Bosnia. "The Srebrenica genocide could probably have been prevented if the Dutch government and the Dutch battalion had reacted differently," the IKV (Interchurch Peace Council) said in its report called "Srebrenica: The genocide that was not prevented". Some 110 lightly armed Dutch soldiers were stationed in the town when it fell to Bosnian Serb forces in July 1995 without a single shot being fired. "There were blunders, there was a lack of concern, there was a single focus — on the Dutch only — but they knew Bosniaks would be killed," said IKV chief Mient Jan Faber, accusing the Dutch of caring only about the safety of their troops.
