World media about the RS:

Drvar – Croats burned 18 Serb houses in order to prevent owners to return before eyes of German Arbiter of Federation, Schwartz-Schilling during his visit to this town. SFOR troops barely stopped a Croat man from shooting on Schilling. Led by his bad experiences in Drvar, Schilling confirmed all hardships of the process of refugee return to their original places to a German press agency DPA. This German politician who was strongly against the Serbs during the war, noticed that he would have to learn a lesson from destroyed Serb houses, whilst avoiding condemnation Croats for their acts of barbarism.

Hague – European News reported on the journalist Dejan Lukic's article 'The Hague Hasn't Seen Justice', where the journalist concluded that the Tribunal did not take into consideration instructions and suggestions of Karadzic, the RS President at the time, with regard to humane treatment of POWs because the Hague, that is, a devil [misinterpretation, meant to be Hades], doesn't like justice. Lukic analysed Karadzic and Izetbegovic's orders in parallel. The latter ordered his soldiers to exterminate Serb POWs in '92, if it was in the interest of the public-spirited and the Islamic Community; women, children and priests shouldn't be spared either, if the same interests were jeopardised.

These incidents will be energetically warded off with the assistance of the Ministry of Interior and responsible individuals will be punished,' Colic promised.
