SD on higher education in BiH	Slobodna Dalmacija, pg 13 ‘Professor, how much for grade?’, mentioned on cover, by Zoran Zekic – commenting on a recent statement by the High Representative for BiH/EU Special Representative, Paddy Ashdown, that the higher education in BiH is “rubbish”, the author acknowledges that BiH has, due to the war, lost a lot of educated people, who were supposed to be pillars of education system and higher education, that there is corruption at universities and various illegalities, which need to be sanctioned. However, the author notes these are isolated, individual cases and not a rule. The author goes on to say that the University of Sarajevo was recently visited by a group of people, who were conducting an opinion poll for an international organization. Apparently, they were asking students whether they are happy with classes, professors and similar issues, and allegedly, the questions were leading students to confirm their dissatisfaction with higher education, i.e. the questions were way too suggestive. In that context, the author says this case gives a more complete picture why the higher education in BiH is recently talked about in negative context.
SD feature on education laws in cantons	Slobodna Dalmacija, pg 13 ‘Education unions: No classes come September’, by Darko Juka – claiming that the imposed elementary and secondary education laws in Cantons 6, 8 and 10 are enabling teachers to conduct lectures in their mother tongue, irrespective of nationality of their pupils, the author claims a lot of time will be wasted during classes to interpret classes from one language to other languages. SD carries Ivo Miro Jovic, an MP in BiH parliament, who did not want to comment as to what triggered politicians in the Posavina and Herzegovina-Neretva Canton to adopt the said laws, however Jovic notes that the imposed laws in Cantons 6, 8 and 10 are not in harmony with the State Framework law, despite the High Representative for BiH, Paddy Ashdown, claiming they indeed are. SD also carries Josip Milic, the President of Union of Croat education workers in Canton 7, who says the laws are discriminatory towards the pupils, because teachers can conduct classes in their mother tongue. In that context, Milic says it is absurd, because the pupils’ right to classes in mother tongue has the priority. Milic could not announce future plans of the Union he leads, however he notes that one of options is a complete termination of classes in Croat cantons or teachers boycotting the law or even mass protests in Mostar. Milic concludes that adoption of the laws does not mean the laws will be implemented in schools, something which will be resisted by the Croats.

NN op-ed on HR	Nezavisne Novine op-ed pg 7 'Bombs' by Almedin Sisic - The author starts the article by saying that "there is no better motive for High Representative Paddy Ashdown to make new comparison between Sarajevo and Belfast than developments that took place in the BiH capital in the past few days." The author reminds of statement HR at the beginning of his mandate, when he compared BiH with developments between London and Belfast. Sisic further expresses disappointment over the fact that HR has not released any statement regarding two latest bomb explosions, which he should have done in his opinion. On this he adds: "Maybe his silence is the price of "daily fight" for implementation of reforms, and maybe it comes from "ignorance" of current events in BiH and Sarajevo." He further stresses citizens of Sarajevo are living in fear, also because names of executors of those crime acts have not been disclosed.
