RTRS reporter from the session says that the proposal of delegate Muhamed Morancic from BOSS was not accepted (that discussion on constitutional changes should be postponed for the period after elections). However, this proposal resulted in discussion of delegates, during which the opposition delegates brought into question legitimacy of the existing BiH Constitution. Sead Avdic from SDP of BiH, claims that the Dayton Agreement is a temporary documents, enacted by supreme force, i.e. meaning it was imposed. The proposal of HDZ' Vlatka Komsic (that delegates should vote on political agreement leaders of parties reached on constitutional changes) was partially accepted, since conclusion of session would stress the voting on constitutional changes includes stance of the BiH HoR on political agreement as well.

RTRS says that opponents of the changes – SBiH and HDZ 1990 – count that 4 independent MPs would join them which would mean rejection of the amendments. Raguz explains they are "not against the agreement but are supportive of corrections. Our votes would depend on our amendments." Oslobodjenje pg 2 'Support to amendment to the Constitution' by A.T.– Main Board of Pensioners' Party also supported proposed amendments to BiH Constitution. FTV – SDA, SDP, SDS, SNSD would all support amendments and stated they are sure the reform would be passed.

BiH Franciscans concerned if const. changes would provide equality of Croats; entities should be abolished; cantonal organisation of BiH	RHB – The Provincial Capitol of the Franciscan Province of Bosna Srebrena expressed deep concern regarding the consequences of the proposed constitutional changes. If those changes do not protect the equality of Croat people in legal, legislative and executive authorities, as well as the right of all people in this country to freedom, cultural, religious and linguistic characteristics and basic human rights, than those changes should not be considered as a step forward, concluded members of the Provincial Capitol. Franciscans in BiH believe that BiH should be reorganized, which includes the abolishment of entities; they deem that the best solution for BiH is cantonal organisation, on the basis of equality of all people. Komarica is also not convinced that the announced second phase of the talks would provide results, saying that he does not believe those ''who let us down on numerous occasions'' (by this he means the IC). He also addressed the issue of poor return of Croats to the RS, revealing that there was a pilot project for the Derventa area (he does not state the year when it took place) the aim of which was to reconstruct 64 Croat and Serb returnees' houses, however the project was stopped by a (female) head of UNHCR office in Dobož.

DA: Deceleration of BiH intellectuals who demand postponing of constitutional changes negotiations	Dnevni Avaz pg 13 'Why constitutional amendments should not be adopted' carries a Declaration of BiH intellectuals (over 40 of them signed it on March 30, 2006) in which they state their reasons because of which constitutional changes amendments should not be adopted. Among the other things, the Declaration says that introducing of entity rights on special, parallel relations with neighboring countries has been based on anti-constitutional abolishment of the original BiH's sovereignty. Also, they believe that insisting to adopt the constitutional changes before the elections, before the Kosovo and Montenegro status is resolved and the verdict in the BiH's lawsuit against SCiG is passed prove to what extent the regional context of social and political turmoil is closely related to the proposed changes. The intellectuals demand postponing of the negotiations on constitutional changes until elections are held, until the process of the BiH's lawsuit against SCiG is over and until the status of Kosovo and Montenegro is finally regulated.

US Ambassador McElhaney confident that BiH Parliament will pass constitutional changes	RHB by Zana Rebo – In an interview to the RHB, the US Ambassador Douglas McElhaney commented to the upcoming parliamentary discussion on the constitutional reform: “Now its time to go forward, and send a strong message to all of us that the people of BiH want progress and want to go forward. I saw poll the other day, done by the UNDP, that demonstrated that there were large group of people in this country who support constitutional changes, and only very few who oppose them.... [President of the European Commission José Manuel Barroso made a very strong statement about this. The EU Presidency made a strong statement about this on behalf of all the members, and the US State Secretary has written to the parties, making it clear that they must go through with this first phase, so that we can start another phase of this discussion.” Oslobodjenje pg 5 ‘We are convinced that Parliament would adopt the first phase’ by Fena – McElhaney told FENA and ONASA news agencies that BiH Parliament is facing the historic day: “We are convinced that the BiH citizens will be represented well and that the Parliament would adopt the first phase of the very important process of constitutional reforms so that BiH could get closer to Europe and the Euro-Atlantic community.” McElhaney stressed that the US would continue supporting BiH, its independence, sovereignty and the integration into Europe and NATO and continue working on the second phase of constitutional reforms. “I, my Embassy and my Government wish to think about moving on to the more important phase because there is a great deal of unfinished business in this country”, underlined McElhaney. Mandić– The German Embassy to BiH welcomes the progress achieved in the process of constitutional reforms in BiH and calls on members of the State Parliament to support the first phase of constitutional reforms. The German Government deems that the proposed constitutional reforms are the good first step for preparing the BiH Constitution for the future. TOL: despite all flaws, constitutional amendments are positive development; BiH still needs fairly firm foreign guidance	Transitions Online ‘Constitutional Reform: Streamlining Bosnia’ by ToL – Analysing on-going constitutional reform in BiH, TOL concludes that “despite all their flaws”, the amendments are positive development for BiH. Commenting objections to the amendments by SBiH founder Haris Silajdzic, article says that his expectations of the bolder reforms which would eventually include abolishment of entities is entirely unrealistic. TOL comments that if he knows this, than Silajdzic is being hypocritical about is opposition, and if he doesn’t know this that he is “seriously out of touch with the reality in his country. Either possibility is bad news for a demoralized Bosniak community that needs nothing more than a reality check.” TOL notes that the amendments to the BiH constitution touch on two critical issues: compatibility of BiH’s with EU institutional setup and interrelations among the three ethnic groups. Noting that perhaps the election year was not the best time to carry out the reform, the article concludes that that way in which the amendments were agreed only shows that BiH still needs fairly firm foreign guidance, but in a way which would not reduce domestic legitimacy of reform. It also notes that “another recipe for future headaches is that the current amendments... increase the authority... of the central government without a corresponding reduction of competencies at lower levels. This is not a good approach to reducing public expenditure and streamlining government.” Despite this, the article concludes: “It is hard to come up with any legitimate reason why anyone should be opposed – but, for some, other reasons will do just fine”

Osl. op-ed: If amendments fail, IC could sweep culprits from the scene and enable BiH to move from the dead spot	Oslobodjenje pg 9 'Uncertainty' op-ed by Mirko Sagolj – Commenting Tuesday's session of BiH House of Representatives which would discuss the amendments to BiH Constitution, Sagolj says it is very uncertain whether they would be passed. If now, says the author, BiH could face heavy crisis. "Maybe it would be best for BiH if amendments aren't adopted. In that case, it would find itself in totally absurd situation", Sagolj cynically notes adding that most complicated political situations are solved only when they reached absurdity. Such situation and this could even force the International Community to "clear political scene of all those who are culprits for such situation and enable this country to finally move from the dead spot".
Osl. op-ed: 'USA keeps RS'	Oslobodjenje pg 9 'USA keeps RS' by Z. Dizdarevic carries that US pressure has been present these days when adoption of constitutional changes amendments is in question and the author puts a special stress on the messages sent by US Deputy Assistant Secretary for Europe and Euro-Asian Affairs Rosemary DiCarlo and Richard Holbrooke. The author says that through these messages one can see that Washington does not intend to stand for changes of the Dayton formula of BiH, that is, its entity division and the author believes that this wrong. Dizdarevic also believes that it is not good that Washington only controls destiny of BiH and that the EU should also engage when the constitutional changes issue is in question. The author believes that, nevertheless, the constitutional changes should be adopted for many reasons and that we should think about how to change the BiH society from a conflict one to the democratic one and return BiH Serbs to BiH.

SD comment: These kind of const. changes will not make BiH more democratic and functional state	Slobodna Dalmacija, front pg splash and pg 10 'Final division of BiH', by Veso Vegar – comments on the constitutional changes process prior to Tuesday's session of BiH HoR that is to discuss the constitutional amendments in which Vegar argues that international officials advocating the changes will manage to secure the necessary majority in the Parliament, be it through pressures, blackmails or rewards. Vegar insists the proposed changes will not make BiH a more democratic or functional state, instead they will offer a realistic basis for definitive division of BiH into two entities, in which the Serbs and Bosniaks will be dominant factors, whilst the Croats will become a minority. As a conclusion, Vegar says the Croat MPs should be rejecting the changes that will enable them to continue the political struggle for better position of BiH Croats.

hide-and-seek' op-ed by Edina Sarac– Commenting the latest statement by the ICTY officials that SCG's obligations towards the Tribunal would not end with Mladic's extradition and that Serbia has promised to do this by end of April, author argues that it appears as if the Mladic's story is about to end. Acknowledging that there were numerous similar stories in the past without any results, DA notes that this time there is a possibility for this to happen as Serbia is being made to choose between Kosovo and Mladic. *"Solving Mladic issue is not the end of the ICTY story.
[Serbian PM Vojislav] Kostunica also knows this. At this moment, the most important thing to him is not to stop negotiations with the EU and to join Partnership for Peace, and to save his seat. Even for the price is his protégé," Sarac concludes.*
