Polovina-Mandic – According to the President of the BiH Election Commission, Vehid Sehic, the said Commission will meet in late January in order to discuss a possibility of finding a way to carry out changes to the BiH Election Law. Sehic explains that the aim is to make such a law that will abide by democratic principles because the current law does not observe one of the fundamental human rights, meaning that a citizen can vote and be voted for irrespective of the fact where he or she lives. He goes on to say that the current provisions enable representatives of one people living in one entity to vote only for representatives of their people in the entity they live in, whilst they cannot vote for their representatives in the other entity. In that context, Sehic notes it will require a political agreement within the current BiH authorities, since it requires changes to the BiH Constitution too.
