UNHCR revoked Vogosca's status of an open city on October 13. The UNHCR spokesperson, Wendy Rappeport, said that the reason for this was the unwillingness of local authorities to cooperate in the domain of minority returns (only 17 cases out of 115 were solved up until now). This statement was contrasted by the Vogosca Mayor Mehmed Kozadra's reiteration that 53 families, i.e. 106 individuals have returned to the municipality up until now. The reporter commented that the discrepancy reflected the difference between the UNHCR and Vogosca authorities' inceptions – UNHCR takes into account only the actual number of returnees, while the latter claim that the number of 'conditions created for possible minority returns' was more significant. The report concluded with an emphasis on the fact that 7,992 refugees now live in Vogosca, most of them being the refugees from Srebrenica, and that 3,500 of current Bosniak inhabitants of Vogosca cannot return to their pre-war homes. It was also highlighted that 'ex-returnees' also exist in BiH now – i.e. people who sell their renovated houses ("Serbs sell their renovated houses... thus further complicating the situation... in Vogosca".)
